Victory for the anti-water fluoridation group Health Concern The Wellington City Council has decided that water fluoridation will not be reintroduced in the city. The council has voted 8-1 to repeal the 1998 fluoridation policy. “The old position of the council is that fluoride is a dental hazard that causes a permanent change in the teeth and even has links to cancer,” councillor Terry Moore told one of the audience that attended the meeting. “The scientific evidence for these claims has been disproved. The jury is still out on fluoride,” he said. “Many of the people who voted for the fluoridation policy are now in their 60s and are going to die sooner because they have got reduced bone density and increased fractures. It’s all a scientific fact,” he said. In the past the council has received requests for the fluoridation policy to be reconsidered. “There has been a call for it to be reconsidered, but until this point there has not been enough evidence to support its reintroduction.” The decision follows extensive research and consultation. “We have visited all the dental centres and health clinics in the city. “The Health Care Commission is very supportive. They know they are getting fluoride free water, and we are getting no new fluoridation dentists,” he said. “The decision is to stop water fluoridation. “The old policy would have required the majority of people in the city to take fluoridated water,” he said. “We’ve now said to people that we can’t force people to drink it.” “It is important to us that the fluoride policy is no longer mandatory for the majority of our citizens,” he said. The council has received a lot of requests to change the policy. “We’ve been inundated with correspondence,” he said. “It shows how much public interest there is in this issue,” he said. “It’s not easy. “The council hasn’t been swayed, and that’s 2d92ce491b
